THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO

These studies clearly indicate the benefits of the cognitive-behavioral group approach to the treatment of panic disorder. The results of the present study are consistent with the findings of the other studies and suggest that the cognitive-behavioral group approach is an effective treatment for panic disorder. The present study also indicates a need for further research on the effectiveness of the cognitive-behavioral group approach.

THE METHOD.

Chlorophyll a in 10 ml. acetone extract of the leaves in the leaves of Chlorella vulgaris was determined spectrophotometrically at 663 m μ in 100% acetone. The amount of chlorophyll a was determined by the method of Lichtenthal and Whistler (1944) and expressed in mg. per g. of fresh weight.

Protein in the culture of the algae was determined by the method of Lowry (1956) using a standard curve of bovine serum albumin. The protein content was expressed in mg. per g. of fresh weight.

Chlorophyll a and protein were determined in the same sample of algae. The results are given in Table 1.
